Cat Creek Crag 2023

NOTE: More routes are being added, better photos will be added in the future.*

Cat Creek Crag is a small cliff band near Cat Creek. The rock is mostly slab in nature with potential for a handful of lines. The only route that I have information on is First Litter which I bolted in 2023. Upon my last visit in 2023 a single top rope anchor was added by someone, there may be more at this point. There is potential for a handful of additional routes and the top of the wall is accessible on foot. The rock is conglomerate and provides a unique experience compared to the limestone of Kananaskis.

Approach: Park at a small pull out in front of the trail head at 50°24'21.7"N 114°42'33.5"W, or at the gravel pull out beside the Cat Creek bridge. Either parking lots have trails that will cut into the forest. This is an established trail. Follow the rough map I made to the crag which is at 50°24'38.5"N 114°42'15.5"W for First Litter.

1. First Litter, 5.9, 9 bolts + 2 ring anchors, 35m
   PR Amy Larson, Taylor Hertzsprung FA Taylor Hertzsprung, October 21, 2023
   Found in the center of the wall, close to the trail as you walk in. Stick clip required, possible to set up as a top rope. Ends on the face just above the ledge. 70m rope required. Technical slab on an interesting conglomerate face.